Saskatchewan's Water Resources and Utilization A. T. Prince,Reginald Harold Clark,1971 The development of an adequate supply of water is a major problem in the prairies This problem arises from several causes insufficient rainfall over large areas particularly during the growing season the uneven and erratic distribution of precipitation in the region and the geographic setting of prairie streams The non uniform distribution of the water resources in the province presents a very real problem of making the water available when and where it is needed a problem with which the province is dealing effectively This paper is concerned only with the broader questions of long term availability and adequacy of water resources in the prairie region P 1
