Abstract

1. Interpretation: While this third feature also seems to be subject to a non-specific, common-sense claim of subjectivity, subjectivism also has its own specific, namely, where the judgments about the beauty of the picture reflect a particular, individual, or even a community's taste.
2. School of Interpretation: This group is made up of members who, while their individual, idiosyncratic features can be captured from community membership, do not share the same taste.
3. Shared taste: In a particular culture, a group of persons will be able to share their taste as if their interpretation were really shared.
4. Interpretation community: those are groups of practicing individuals interacting with one another. They include families, friends, students, and teachers.
5. Community: is made up of groups of people practicing interpretation, while some will agree but have to negotiate with idiosyncratic members. In doing so, they share their taste (shared).
6. There is a shared meaning as a result of the use of community, the community members that say, for a living, interpret what this particular subject is about, and that can only be interpreted in a particular way.
7. Practice: as suggested that there is an act of interpretation and that the shared taste is not the same as the taste.
8. Interpretation: a particular feeling about a particular subject, which is shared through a particular interpretation of a particular subject, which is shared through the process of the interpretation.
